SCARY NEWS...A new study from the Hebrew University of Jerusalem, published in 'Human Reproduction Update' and reported in 'Science Daily', found a 59.3% decline in total sperm count among men from North America, Europe, Australia, and New Zealand. In light of recent evidence linking poor semen quality with higher risk of hospitalization and death, the findings strongly suggest a significant decline in male reproductive health with serious implications beyond fertility and reproduction. Exposure to "chemical castrators," especially from agricultural chemicals like atrazine - which cause "feminization" of males with resultant hormonal disruption and sperm population decline - are widely blamed as the cause. Researchers found the decline, which is accelerating in Western nations including the U.S., could lead to a collapse in human population.
